

Copleys Solicitors look to future with new Website

Huntingdon and St Ives based law firm Copleys launched a brand new website on 2nd January 2009. The site at www.copleys.net is the focal point of major changes at the six-partner solicitors practice that has served the local community for over a century.

Speaking at the St Ives Office, partner Mike Trippitt who has been leading the website project said “We are delighted to introduce our new site to our clients, the public and professional colleagues. It represents our commitment not only to client service but also to development and forward-thinking”.

Copleys is renowned for providing high quality legal solutions both to business and individuals. The new website has a number of new features to assist clients, potential clients and others seeking information about the firm or its services.

From the Home Page visitors can easily access full details of the firm’s many areas of expertise. Additionally, the site contains useful information about the areas of law in which the firm can help. There is a guide to the divorce process, an explanation of the home buying process and information for those starting a business or leasing premises to mention only four.

Copleys believes that its strength is its people. In a clear and concise format each member of the Copleys’ teams’ biography together with a photograph can be accessed. This is designed to help clients and professionals have quick and efficient access to the right person. Links direct from the site mean that your request for legal help or information can be answered in seconds.

Mike Trippitt continued. “We have always been accessible and our website is only part of our commitment to making ourselves available to our clients. They are now given direct dial telephone numbers and we always welcome our clients visiting our offices. There is no substitute for personal service.”

Recognising the importance of keeping clients up to date www.copleys.net has a News section which is updated twice a week bringing important developments and changes in areas of law of interest to both the business community and private individuals.

Talking at 28 High Street, the firm’s town centre office in Huntingdon, Family Law partner Lucy Ardern looked forward to 2009. “This year is significant for the firm. From our well-established roots we are moving forward to provide our clients with the services they need in today’s economically challenging times. Value for money has always been a key factor in what we offer.”

She continued. “The website launch coincides with a change in stationery and brochure style. It emphasises our up to date approach built upon expertise and high standards of personal client care.”

From the firm’s St Ives office senior partner Ian Langworthy has seen many changes in legal practice in the last four decades. “Copleys has never stood still.” he said. “We have always responded to the needs of our clients and the local community. We continue to develop new services and areas of expertise that meet the needs of those requiring legal help. Our family department has expanded with the arrival of Paula Hamilton at our St Ives office. This follows the strengthening of our Property department here. Other plans in the pipeline make this a particularly important year for the firm and its clients.”
